“ Sorry it took me so long to post something. I was so sad to hear about Uncle Wayne passing. I really only spent time with him once, when my wife Karen and I visited him right after we got married. We were driving from the Oregon to Pease AFB, New Hampshire, where I was stationed. The drive was kind of like our honeymoon. We got to stay with Karen's family for a good few days, and they treated us royalty, even showing us around the sights in New York City. It was awesome. It just hurts me that we never got back there in the past forty years. But when I finally get to retire in a couple of years, that will change..

“ I will remember Uncle Wayne and Uncle Don younger brothers of their elder brother Russell J. Schneider as people who could make people laugh. I lost my mom in April of 2024 and she kept laughing at Uncle Wayne's joke of the banana being a "monkey pill". That joke alone kept my mom going just before she passed away last year. We will miss good men like both of you Uncle Wayne and his brother Uncle Don! The world has lost three great men in the Schneider clan of which my father Russell J. Schneider is included. God's speed to all of them!

“ Cousin Wayne and I were both third sons in our families. We were close in age, so whenever our family visited the Schneiders in Whitestone, I would often hang out with Wayne. Into adulthood, Wayne told me he was joining the New York City Police Force - with a plan: he would serve in a difficult post for his first 10 years, thinking that would put him in a less difficult position for his last 10 years. He did his first 10 years in Harlem - and I heard comments that showed he had empathy for the people in his district. The last 10 years at the NYPD were in administration. I am indebted to him because my father, Henry Schneider, died in Penn Station. Wayne expedited matters so that my father's body arrived in Manhasset, Long Island, in time for the funeral. After retirement, Wayne wound up upstate and sheep and chickens and other animals became part of his life. So, farewell, Cousin Wayne. May God have mercy upon you; may God have mercy upon us, the living.
